Brass Bands of Canada
a historical directory

Unknown brass band, Alberta

Introduction

Of the many brass bands that have flourished in Canada over the last 200 years very few have documented records covering their history. This directory is an attempt to collect together information about such bands and make it available to all. 374 bands are recorded here (31 currently active), with 7 additional cross references for alternative or previous names.

This volume is an extracted subset of my earlier “Brass Bands of the World – a Historical Directory” (2019).

Where "active" dates are given these indicate documented appearances - the bands may well have existed beyond those dates quoted. Bands which folded for more than 1 year (apart from during WW1 or WW2) with a successor band being later formed are regarded as "extinct".

“Still active” indicates that there is evidence for continuous activity for that band in the previous years up to that date.

Minor name variations, e.g. X Brass Band, X Silver Band, X Silver Prize Band, are generally not referenced, unless it is clear that they were separate entities. Various bands have changed their names several times over the years, making tracking them down more difficult.

Where there is more than one instance of a specific brass band’s name, this is indicated by a number suffix – e.g. (1), (2) to indicate the order of appearance of the bands. Streetsville Brass Band currently holds the record for Canadian bands with (3).

If the location is not inherent or obvious from the band's name, then the particular village or town is indicated, otherwise only the relevant province or territory.

Place names are those used for the towns and villages today. Where there are historical variants, these are cross-referenced, as are also any alternative names, or common misspellings.

Documentation about bands in the early years is very sketchy, reliant largely on reports in the newspapers and magazines of the day. Often bands would have been referred to in ambiguous terms, and it is not entirely clear which specific band it is. For example, a village may have had a temperance band, known as X Temperance Brass Band, but often referred to as X Brass Band. There may have also been an X Brass Band contemporary with the X Temperance Brass Band. In this case both names are recorded as being distinct entities, until further information is available.

Bands in the 1830s to 1850s were often referred to solely by their leader's name - "Mr X's Band" - which making the band’s identification and location difficult - where these have been verified the band has been included.

Individuals associated with bands are recorded where known. In some cases there is ambiguity about names – usually with regard to spelling – and the alternate versions are given. The named roles of bandmaster, conductor and leader were somewhat fluid in many bands. For smaller/earlier bands they were one and the same. As bands became more structured, with rules, committees and constitutions, it was not unusual to have all three as distinct roles. The leader was usually the principal cornet player and, certainly in early bands, conducted and led the band from his playing position. The bandmaster traditionally organised the band, maintained discipline and occasionally led and/or conducted the band. Conductors, or musical directors as they tend to be known as today, provide the musical leadership of the band, choosing the music, training and rehearsing the players, and guiding the performances through their baton skills. Some bands employed professional conductors for short periods of time, to coach them in preparation for a contest and to lead them during the contest performance.

Sadly, although bandmasters and conductors are often mentioned in reports and documents, it is rare to find details of other members of the bands. Where known, such lists of members are recorded here. Christian/given names are rare, as are the instruments each played. Sometimes the report of winners of instrumental prizes at contests yields such details. Where there is ambiguity about a person’s name – due mainly to conflicting spellings – both alternatives are given.

In addition to the bandmasters and conductors named herein, some more can be found in the Brass Band Results database – https://brassbandresults.co.uk – for specific bands.

More detailed information about a few hundred specific bands does exist elsewhere, in books and journals and in online resources, particularly current bands' own websites and the IBEW (www.ibew.co.uk) which contains much of the information herein, together with further information on individual bands. Published histories and dedicated information sources, where known, are indicated in the entries for the bands.

Some broad categories of brass bands

- Brass v. Silver bands – there is no difference between them as far as the instruments are concerned, merely the colour of the finish, and whether the brass metal has been electro-plated with silver. This was an expensive process when it first became available for instruments, and “silver bands” were very proud of their new instruments, which indicated that the band was financially strong, and also possibly had been successful in contests, winning cash prizes! The first known silver band was Stephenson's Operatic Silver Band in 1872. Tyler's Family Band was a "silver band" during the 1870s, Corbett’s Family Silver Band was active around 1880, the Universe Works Silver Band in 1881, and Rushden Temperance Silver Band in January 1884.

- Town bands – or village bands – most bands are associated with a particular location and consisted of musicians from a range of occupations in the place. Often established through public subscription (some bands even had this appellation), or occasionally by the munificence of some local landowner or benefactor, they quickly became a key part of the community and its life, providing music for celebrations, fetes, shows and galas and, of course, funerals. School teachers and vicars were often the initial driving force to establish bands.

- Works bands – since the earliest days many industrial and commercial companies and organisations have sponsored or supported brass bands. Perhaps the most familiar are the colliery bands of the UK which flourished at the height of the mining industries. Others that featured significantly, particularly in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, were iron works & foundries, wool and cotton mills, gas works, railway works, and shipyards.

- Religious bands – aside from the Salvation Army, many other Christian organisations saw the benefit of establishing brass bands, partly to assist with spreading their messages, and also to provide a musical focus to workers and parishioners alike. Perhaps the most evident were those related to Methodist and Wesleyan chapels. Church of England, Catholic, Gospel, Baptist and Church Army bands were also common. Adult Sunday Schools, Bible Classes, the “Pleasant Sunday Afternoon” movement and young men’s organisations (e.g. the Y.M.C.A) also spawned brass bands.

- Temperance bands – the temperance movement in the 19th century was partly driven by various religious groups (e.g. Methodists) but non-religious/fraternal organisations also arose. Many of these turned to brass bands to help spread their message of teetotalism. Some of the more common ones were the I.O.G.T. (International Order of Good Templars), the Church of England/Ireland Temperance Society, the Rechabites, the Band of Hope, the Blue Ribbon Army, and various “Total Abstinence”, “Teetotal” and “Suppression of Drunkenness” societies.

- Friendly society bands – during the 19th century various friendly and fraternal organisations arose, often as savings and mutual benefit societies, but also to foster links with both workers and professional men. The most famous of these is the Freemasons, but there were very few brass bands associated with masonic lodges. More numerous were the Oddfellows’, Ancient Shepherds’, Free Gardeners’, R.A.O.B. (Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes), and Foresters’ brass bands.

- Family bands – these were most common in the USA, and usually consisted of the parents with some or all of their children playing a variety of instruments. Only those that had largely or wholly brass instrumentation are recorded here. In many cases they were semi-professional and travelled the country performing in theatres or at special occasions.

- Professional bands – brass and mixed instrumentation bands were common in most theatres and places of recreation. Some places had resident bands, others employed various passing or transient “acts” to provide the musical entertainment or accompaniment to their productions. Travelling circuses, menageries and shows also had their resident bands accompanying them. A few of the more notable professional brass bands have been recorded in this directory.
- Institutional bands – many industrial schools, workhouses, reformatories, orphanages, children’s homes, prisons and asylums, particularly in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, established brass bands. These served three main functions – to give discipline for the inmates/children (almost exclusively boys as far as the bands were concerned), raise funds for the institution through their concerts, and provide a means of employment (often in army bands) when they left the school.

- Volunteer brass bands and army brass bands. There were large numbers of rifle and artillery volunteers, reserve and similar brigades active in the latter part of the 19th and early 20th centuries. Bands were often created to assist with the parades and in some cases local/village bands were “co-opted” or enrolled for a time to serve with the detachments. Units that clearly had brass bands have been recorded in the directory but, equally, a large number were drum and fife, flute, or woodwind bands and those have been ignored.

- Political bands – similar to those associated with churches, various political movements saw the benefit of having brass bands to help promote their causes. These were particularly evident in processions and parades and were much more common in Ireland. At times there were labour, conservative (e.g. Primrose League), nationalist, loyalist, and liberal brass bands.

- Trade bands – these were bands associated with a particular trade (rather than a specific company). Included with these are those belonging to trade unions, together with those established by and from the workers in a trade – e.g. carpenters, bricklayers, seamen etc. More common in the two metropoles of London and, particularly, Dublin.

- Ladies’ brass bands – until recent years these were largely unknown in the British Isles. There was a good tradition of female bands in the USA and also in Germany (often known as Damen Blas-Orkester), and female musicians were not uncommon in the USA town and cornet bands. It was not until the 1960s that women made any significant inroads into the male-dominated brass bands of Britain, and even today there are relatively few female conductors, composers or arrangers for brass bands.

Exclusions from this directory

- Salvation Army brass bands - generally not included in this directory. There have been a large number across the world over the years, and have spread across the world. Their history is comprehensively covered by Ronald W. Holz's book “Brass Bands of the Salvation Army”. The website “Salvation Army Banding” - http://www.sabanding.com – contains a wealth of information about historical Salvation Army brass bands.

- Brass and Reed / Military bands – instrumentation of early bands – particularly in the first half of the 19th century – varied considerably. It is probable that many early bands designated as “X Brass Band” had some woodwind instruments included. However, later bands with “brass and reed” or “military” designations (excluding volunteer bands) have largely been ignored in this directory, but a few have been included where there is reason to do so.

- Youth and junior brass bands - not included unless there is evidence that they were quite distinct from the relevant adult/senior band or were completely stand alone. Many brass bands have had junior or training bands which have been successful in their own right, and these have been noted, where appropriate.

- “Scratch” bands – those that were brought together for a single event – e.g. the Whit Friday march contests – are not included, unless there is a particular historical relevance or interest

- “Ghost” bands – various villages, towns and organisations, on seeing the success of a neighbour’s brass band, would propose the formation of their own band. In many cases this was successful, but other times, despite initial enthusiasm, various meetings, even substantial fund-raising and, in one case, instruments being purchased, a band never came to fruition. Similarly there were cases where attempts were made to reform bands after their demise, which then failed for one reason or another (usually financial or lack of local support).

Instrumentation

The instrumentation within brass bands has evolved over the years. Woodwind instruments which formed part of the early bands were gradually weeded out until the “all brass” ensemble became standard, eventually fixing, at least for contesting purposes, on 25 brass instrumentalists plus percussion. Although this is now the standard for brass bands, bands have always made the best of the players and instruments available, and have ranged in size from quartets to ensembles of over 40 players. Woodwind instruments became less common as the new saxhorns were introduced and rapidly became popular in the middle of the 19th century.

The standard brass band today consists of

Acknowledgements

The information about the brass bands here has been collected over the last 20 years, using published resources, libraries, archives, newspapers, magazines, internet databases, bandsmen past and current, and their relatives, and other band historians. There have been hundreds of correspondents from across the world who have provided information and images of vintage brass bands. These are too many to acknowledge individually, but my thanks go to all who have contributed in any way with information. I am grateful for the support and information provided by Brian Stride whose own research into the bands of British Columbia has been most helpful.

Anglo Canadian Leather Co. Concert Band (Huntsville, Ontario)
In 1900, the Anglo-Canadian Leather Company Band was established with a nucleus of Italian immigrant workers at the tannery in Huntsville, Ontario by the plant's owner, Charles Orlando Shaw, a wealthy amateur cornetist who provided rehearsal space, instruments, uniforms, and music, and had a bandstand built. Vincent Grosso was the first conductor, followed by George Simmons of Bracebridge, until 1918, when Shaw, taking lessons from Herbert L. Clarke in Chicago, persuaded the well-known cornetist to become the director of the band (which he did for 5 years). Clarke recruited a number of musicians who took regular jobs with the Anglo-Canadian Leather Co. as clerks, machinists, electricians, etc., received a bonus salary, and were provided with housing. Brockville Silver Cornet Band (Ontario)
Active in 1880

Bruderheim Brass Band (Alberta)
As early as 1910, Bruderheim was able to boast its own group of musicians who formed a band with a common purpose in mind – they loved music. This group would be active for a time, interest would fade, numbers would dwindle and finally the group would disband. After a time, renewed interest would encourage prospective band members to reorganize and become active once more and the pattern would repeat itself. The bands, which usually averaged 10 to 20 members in number, played for many occasions, including July 1st celebrations, school picnics, church functions and sometimes even funerals

St John Cornet Band (New Brunswick)
Founded on 15 November 1874. The members were drawn from two bands organized by local Roman Catholics, the Christian Brothers and Father Matthews. The Band was well-known to city residents and played at public gatherings, sporting events, special ceremonies, church picnics and parades. In 1893 the band was invited to perform at the Chicago World's Fair. The band maintained a diverse repertoire that included light opera, spirituals, patriotic selections, fox trots, and marches. The Band was committed to giving back to the community, raising funds for the erection of public bandstands, on Chipman Hill, in 1899, and in King Square (King Edward VII Memorial Bandstand), in 1909. Edward Robert George Morton was a member in the early 1900s. [Further information - see: City Cornet Band - Golden anniversary : City Cornet Band 1874-1924 - City Cornet Band, Saint John, New Brunswick, 1924]

St John's Brass Band (Arva, Ontario)
Active in the 1890s. St John's Band was named after the original (and alternative) name of the settlement, taken from the Anglican church there. The village, had a fluctuating population of about 200, but there were several other settlements nearby. William Guest, a harness maker of Arva at that time, was the leader. Other members were: J.H. Sifton who played cornet; Jack Farrell, solo cornet; Robert Carmichael, first alto; Jack McFarlane, first tenor; Lew Farrell, second alto; Jack Watson, second tenor; Charles Goulding, cornet; Guy Farrell, bass; Homer Jackson, tuba; Warren Decker and George Hatch, drums.
Several years later, Clayton A. Decker, recalling the adventures of the group said, 'Our first engagement was Esther Sifton's wedding. We only knew three pieces - a waltz and two marches, so we played them over and over!' As the players persevered in their endeavours, they became popular entertainers and for four years they played at box socials, garden parties, church meetings and weddings.

Winnipeg City Band (Manitoba)
Founded in May 1902, leader Sam L. Barrowclough, a cornet player who had emigrated from England and opened a music store with a partner, Ernest Semple. The band made successful tours through Ontario and the northern United States; a Toronto critic asserted that “it was quite the equal of Sousa’s celebrated organization.” It held regular Sunday concerts in the Walker Theatre for many years after the building opened in 1907. Some concerts had thematic content such as Patriotic Night and Operatic Night. A unique benefit concert was held in May 1912, with the Royal Alexandra Hotel Orchestra, for the families of bandsmen who had perished in the sinking of the Titanic a month earlier. The band played in city parks frequently and one time went to Winnipeg Beach where it played waltzes and two-steps for the holiday crowd. Later the band amalgamated with that of the 90th Rifle Regiment, which Barrowclough took overseas during World War I. Barrowclough also led the Winnipeg Theatre Orchestra in the early 1900s.
